NEON NIGHTS

If you've been eager to hop on the neon trend train but not sure where to start, grab hold of a day-glo clutch. Their sculptural shapes are brilliant works of art, and are an avant-garde twist on the classic box-shaped clutch, the minaudière. Whether you pair one with a brightly coloured dress or use it to punctuate an all-black outfit, you'll be adding a colour kick to your look that has electrifying results.

Dear Jeanne, What's your take on allowing bra straps to show? I've seen women ruin the look of elegant outfits with their bra strap showing.—Beate

Dear Beate, Call me old fashioned, but even though revered style icons like Madonna have been wholeheartedly subscribing to the notion of underwear as outerwear for years, flashing their undies on a regular basis, I still cringe whenever I see an exposed bra strap, especially when it looks a little tattered or grey. I agree with you: There's such a wide variety of affordable, beautiful bras out there, that if you're adamant about flaunting bits of them, make sure they're worthy of exposure. Bras with invisible, clear or plastic straps are also increasingly popular, though I'm not sure I like the blatant way some women wear them. Still, a clear strap is much more discreet and not so in-your-face as a regular one. Of course, with all of the halter-style, or criss-cross straps around, to say nothing of strapless bras, I wonder why straps ever get shown at all. Evidently, designers like Jean Paul Gaultier and Dolce and Gabbana have done their bit to popularize exposed undergarments, and have created countless bras and corsets meant to be worn on their own.

Perhaps my aversion to visible bra straps goes back to my high school days, when girls with exposed bra straps were regarded as promiscuous. That may have been a bit extreme, but there's unquestionably a bit of a tawdry feel to visible straps. And that's precisely why some of these rebel designers promote the look, encouraging women to walk the edge and flaunt their sexual energy in sartorially overt ways. It's all very harmless, of course. But these days, I find there's something much more sensual and sexy about covering up, and these stray straps can make even the most expensive, well-designed outfit look very cheap very fast.

The only time I can recall blatantly showing a bra strap was when I wore a one-shouldered, red jersey Greta Contstantine dress to a wedding. I teamed the dress with a wide black belt, and the tiny, thin black strap of my chic French bra on my bare shoulder seemed to balance the dress. But I'd like to note that the strap didn't even resemble a traditional bra strap. It simply looked like a little spaghetti strap, and seemed to be part of the dress. Bra straps showing under sheer tops can look quite feminine and sensual, however. These days, demure is the word when it comes to sexy, feminine dressing. For the most part, I think visible bra straps do tend to look cheap, and while it may be a matter of personal taste, God is truly in the details in fashion. Unless you're going for some kind of "trampy chic" effect, I'd say nix the notion of exposing those straps, and leave a little more to the imagination. - Jeanne

TAN REMOVER

BY ASHLEY KOWALEWSKI

Self-tanner-related incident? No worries. St. Tropez Tan Optimiser Self Tan Remover is your saviour, ideal for eliminating stains—especially on your palms—or a faux glow over-do. The shimmery exfoliant scrubs away the orange and leaves skin soft and stain-free. Although best used right after your oops moment, it works up to four hours after the initial application, so if you only notice those crazy orange hands when you sit down for your late-morning latte, there's still time to fix things. $25, sephora.com

The time has never been better to make an on-trend beauty statement with nails inspired by our favourite summer treats

BY DEBORAH FULSANG

MAKEUP IS SUPPOSED TO BE FUN. For most women.

it is, we dare say, not rocket science. (Apologies right now to the beauty labs and R&D departments the world over.) In this carpe diem spirit, we embrace the happy-go-lucky mood of current nail trends. From Rihanna to Gaga, we translate the statement-making claw-like Stiletto to the more real-worldpossible Slim Stiletto Nail in two-tone green. We also pluck the neon trend straight from the spring fashion runways and offer up an orange-flavoured Freezie hue as our glow-in-the-dark favourite. And texture-wise, we say: play. From crackle-top coats and sparkles to sponged and ombre effects, the mani of the moment is all about texture, mixing it up and trying a new icecream hue or two, or three.

Every little girl's favourite cute cat is opening her own beauty spa in—where else—Dubai. The Hello Kitty Spa website promises "posh pampering" and "sugar, spice and everything incredibly nice." Services for all ages will include Kitty-cures (manicures) and Hairdooz (special event hair services).

SHADES OF GREY

The best-selling erotic book series loosely based on Twilight has been so successful, author E.L. James has signed a licensing deal. The Fifty Shades of Grey brand will likely include jewellery, apparel (including lingerie, of course) and even beauty products.

THE RETURN OF

After years of revival rumours, the Schiaparelli fashion house -once owned by late Italian designer Elsa Schiaparelli, a rival to Coco Chanel—will finally relaunch this fall, thanks to fashion mogul Diego Della Valle, who bought all of the late designer's trademarks and archives six years ago. A new designer will be announced in September.

WORLD'S MOST FACE CREAM

Japanese brand Clé de Peau Beauté turns 30 this year and to celebrate, the company is releasing a $13,000 skin cream called La Crème on September 21. Only three jars—made with 30 layers of handmade crystal and three platinum accent rings—are being produced globally. The brand's flagship store in Tokyo will be accepting orders.

ROW YOUR

"I'm obsessed with brows," laughs Kira Thompson, owner of Toronto's Brow House. Notthatitwasn'tobvious. We'd been talking for a half an hour about what goes into to shaping and maintaining perfect brows. She confessed that the rate of misshapen brows walking around is so high she blocks them out whennotinhereast-endsalon.Here's the thing, when it comes to getting this season's brows (yes, brows have trends, just like everything else), it's more about what you should not be doing than what you should. The most in-demand models this year—Arizona Muse, Freja Beha Erichsen, Joan Smallsare known for their strong, eyeframing brows. So, put down the tweezers-you should grow out your brows.

Chantel Guertin, The Kit's editor-at-large, says fuller brows are the trend to try right now. ``Butthat doesn't mean you have to go fuller than you're comfortable with," she says. "Skinny browseven if they're in style—just don't look as good as a full, groomed brows. There's a reason we have brows (besides to catch the sweat in spin class): they really do frame your eyes and your entire face."

Letting nature take its course, however, especially if you're a brunette, isn't always an option. You have to find a balance between looking like the seventh cast member of an early Friends episode and that Brooke-Shieldsin-her-Calvins commercial. And if you've gone too far with tweezing, knowthatyou can start over, it may just take some time. Thompson saysthatmanyofherconsultations with clients start with delivering the news that they've got some growing-in to do. "Everyone says, 'It won't grow!' But it will, though it could take three months." While you're waiting out that awkward period, get cozy with an eyebrow pencil or shadow to softly fill in any gaps.

Full brows look very "right now" (and those sad, skinny tadpoles look so wrong), but shape trumps everything. Says Thompson: "We have to work with what God gave us. If you try to deviate too much from that, it won't go with your face." If you choose to DIY your brows, make sure you're just tidying up, rather than re-shaping. Guertin notes that many at-home pluckers go too far on either end of the brow. "Your brows should start directly above the inner corner of your eye and end in a diagonal line from your nose through the outer corner of your eye."

To avoid DIY blunders, Guertin visits an esthetician a few times a year to get her brows shaped. "Then I maintain them in-between visits myself," she says. "For a few months after you've had them professionally groomed, you can usually clean up stray hairs with tweezers. Once I start to feel like it's harder to see the defined shape of my brows, I go back to get them re-shaped."

DIANE KRUGER'S SWFFT TRFAT

BY VANESSA TAYLOR

These frothy fashion confections are not the easiest looks to pull off, because they easily lean toward the princess-y bridal look that most of us run away from. Leave it to Diane Kruger to master this stunning frock at this year's amfAR event. While the dress boasts intricate, dreamy detailing on the bodice and skirt, the silhouette—along with ladylike extras like her statement earrings—ground this outfit. Of course, we have to also mention her gorgeous pin-curled hair and dark smoky eyes-simply flawless.

NAME CLAIRE GARDENHIRE-SELVA

OCCUPATION MOTHER

DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE "Classic and functional, with a touch of fun thrown in."

laire Gardenhire-Selva is no stranger to the runway: the Colorado-born ex-model started modelling at 14, working the runway and travelling the world for Calvin Klein, Armani, Vera Wang and Betsey Johnson before retiring at the grand old age of 23. A string of fateful circumstances led her to Halifax, where her husband is from. While frequently visiting the city, Gardenhire-Selva eventually fell for Nova Scotia, too. "My husband wasn't sure he was ready to move back to his hometown, but when I visited, I knew we had to settle here," she says.

Living in Halifax has changed Gardenhire-Selva's attitude to fashion and shopping. "There is so much locally designed fashion in my wardrobe these days," she says, citing her love of dresses from Pretty Things Boutique. "I also adore the vintage clothing collection curated by Anna Gilkerson at Love Me Boutique, because she has such a good eye for beautiful things."

As much as she loves shopping in Halifax, there are some things she can't get there. "I shop around online fashion sites to get exactly what I want. Or I'll shop in Texas when visiting my mother."

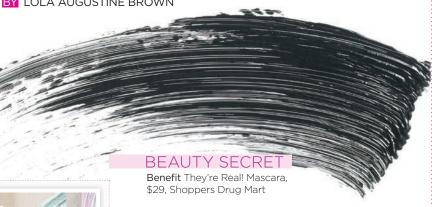

Motherhood has also helped Gardenhire-Selva's style to evolve. "I used to dress much more outrageously in fabulous vintage ensembles-and I was never out of stilettos," she says. "Fashion has become much more functional for me now. I still like classic and simple things, but I add a touch of fun with vintage accessories and a scarf whenever I can."
